This authority will allow the personal representative to have an attorney appointed to represent you if you desire an attorney and if, in its opinion, obtaining court approval for the appointment of an attorney is not necessary under the circumstances. If you do not desire an attorney and if the personal representative determines that appointment of an attorney is not necessary, you should sign a declaration stating your decision to the court. Before the personal representative will allow the personal representative to have an attorney appointed to represent you if you desire an attorney, the personal representative will require that you present a declaration statement and any supporting documents to show that the appointment of an attorney is necessary. If you object to the appointment of an attorney, you should file a written objection with the court. If the personal representative appoints an attorney at your request, the personal representative will request a court order allowing the personal representative to continue to represent you in the matter. If the court grants the request, the personal representative will have the authority to act on your behalf in the matter. If the court denies the request, the personal representative will have the authority to act on your behalf in the matter without the assistance of an attorney.
